Questions which will help you read the article better:

1. On Vertical vs. Horizontal: When does a customer actually feel the pain of a generic assortment enough to abandon a 10-minute horizontal quick-commerce app (like Blinkit or Zepto) for a dedicated vertical app? Does a higher margin in this category make up for lower daily order frequency?

2. On the "Why": How does embedding life-stage intelligence and age-based curation into an app architecture fundamentally change user retention compared to a standard search-and-buy marketplace?

3. On the Landscape & Players: Looking at the broader ecosystem from massive omnichannel incumbents (where a majority of revenue comes from private labels) to nimble new startups : what specific strengths do new entrants have to unseat legacy players in a trust-heavy category?

4. On Market Dynamics: Given the capital required to build dense dark-store networks, do you view vertical quick-commerce players as enduring standalone category kings, or are they building a niche playbook that horizontal giants will eventually acquire or crush?
