THE PROBLEM

Every Visarjan Leaves Something Behind

Plaster of Paris & toxic paint

Most murtis are made of PoP and painted with synthetic, heavy-metal dyes that don’t dissolve — they just sink.

Marine and aquatic life pays the price

Lakes, rivers and beaches see fish, turtles and other aquatic life harmed in the weeks after immersion season.

Tonnes of debris, every single year

Municipal bodies across India clear lakhs of idols and hundreds of tonnes of festival waste from water bodies each season.

THE PARADOX

We welcome Him with devotion.

We say goodbye without thinking.

The celebration deserves a farewell as beautiful as its welcome.

THE SOLUTION

Aarambh Means a Beginning. We Made Visarjan One Too.

We don’t ask anyone to change how they celebrate. The prayers stay, the traditions stay — we simply give nature a place in the story after Visarjan.

01

Ganesha

A handcrafted murti made of natural, plant-friendly material.

02

Earth

After Visarjan, the material simply returns to the earth.

03

Seed

The Aarambh grow bag, cocopeat & tulsi seeds begin their work.

04

Tulsi

With water, sunlight and a little care, a sprout takes root.

05

Aarambh

A prayer that becomes a plant. A farewell that becomes a beginning.

OUR ULTIMATE GOAL

The Shore Deserves an Aarambh Too.

Every idol we make finds a new beginning on land. Now, every rupee we earn will help the coastline find its own.

100% of all profit generated through Aarambh is pledged to beach clean-up drives, run every year in the weeks right after Visarjan season.
